"Never underestimate the power of a mother-daughter duo. This one comes in the form of Anna Hunter and Laura Walford, who run Belgravia Gallery on Albemarle Street. The gallery, which was established in 1986, is known for curating not only the work of acclaimed artists, but also for its close ties to charities, focusing on helping disadvantaged people in Tamil Nadu, India, and The Sebastian Hunter Memorial Trust. Here, you will find etchings by Rembrandt and lithographs by Prince Charles, as well as paintings by acclaimed British and international artists, and influential figures such as Nelson Mandela - the perfect example of art for worthy causes."
