

BELGRAVIA GALLERY

Belgravia Gallery was established some 30 years ago by Anna Hunter and has been run together with her daughter, Laura Walford, for the past 20 years.

Best known for selling signed lithographs for good causes by well-known names such as Nelson Mandela, HRH The Prince of Wales, Sir Peter Blake and Andy Warhol, the gallery also exhibits work by emerging and established artists and sculptors. Greek paintings of turquoise waters by Maria Filopoulou can be found alongside colourful abstract paintings by Monroe Hodder; stone sculptures of tall elongated women by Bettina Seitz sit well amongst the African-inspired paintings of Jan Couetts.

The gallery was situated in Belgravia (hence the name) and then Mayfair until last year, when it relocated to its stunning premises in the Surrey Hills just outside Guildford. The range of art can now be viewed in a home environment - a dining room, living room or bedroom - and gives collectors a far greater ability to imagine how a work may look in their own home. Home or office visits can also be arranged along with viewings in London.

The gallery's ethos has always been to be welcoming, approachable and informal – and to encourage those who may be intimidated by a gallery to feel at home. Anna and Laura enjoy helping those wishing to start a collection, no matter what the budget, and those wishing to add to their existing collection. They are also happy to advise on where art should be placed in a home or office and can provide art installation and re-framing services.
